

them had had time to think about how bad it might have been. According to Wayne the success of the rescue was all down to their experience and their military training. Between them the pair have made more than 6,000 jumps and have worked together for years. On the rare occasions when something goes wrong professional soldiers are trained to focus on the job in hand, to remember what they've been taught and to react quickly.